

Columbia Pack Battery Company

Who invented the Columbia battery?

The trademark "Columbia" was proposed by Nelson C. Cotabish, a sales manager at NCC. In 1896, the company marketed the very first battery intended for widespread consumer use: the sealed, 6-inch, 1.5-volt Columbia battery. NCC was the first company to successfully manufacture and distribute sealed dry-cell batteries on a large scale.

What is a Columbia battery?

The technology of the Columbia -- a carbon-zinc battery using an acidic electrolyte-- served as the basis of all dry-cell batteries for the next 60 years, until the introduction of the alkaline battery by the Eveready Battery Company (now Energizer) in the late 1950s. Back to top

What is a Columbia dry cell battery?

"The Columbia Dry Cell Battery" commemorative booklet produced by the National Historic Chemical Landmarks program of the American Chemical Society in 2005 (PDF). Modern battery development can be traced to the work of Luigi Galvani, who observed in the 1780s that a frog's leg twitched when connected by arcs made of iron and brass.

Why did Leclanché introduce the Columbia battery?

The introduction of the Columbia marked an important step in the transformation of batteries from industrial products to consumer goods. Leclanché's wet cells could not meet market needs for a durable, maintenance-free, non-spill, and non-breakable battery that was also inexpensive. The dry cell did, especially with subsequent improvements.
